

Presentation Introduction

Amanda would like to provide you with all of the tools you need to write a unique introduction that reveals her presentation as meaningful and useful for the audience, as well as recognizing them for the work they do!

The guidelines:

- Acknowledge the participants in some way – what they have done, how well they have done it etc.
- Say something about your group that indicates why you have invited Amanda to speak to them
- Say something about Amanda that indicates what she brings to the table
- Have fun! If you have fun it will give them permission to loosen up and enjoy themselves as they learn

An example:

*“We know that you have all worked very hard this last year and there has been a lot of change, meaning we have to do more with less in less time! We appreciate your efforts and we wanted to say thank you – so we have asked Amanda Gore to(examples) renew your energy levels, restore your sense of humor, help you be better leaders, bust your stress, help you laugh – or all of the above!
Please welcome Amanda Gore!”*

As for content, please feel free to talk about Amanda's education and experience as you see fit. Amanda has a degree in physical therapy with a major in psychology. She has also written several books, and has been speaking for many years.
